A new program relies on home visitations to teach first-time parents how to build a stable home

Lisa Close holds her baby girl, Constance, on her lap and gazes into the 3-month-old's eyes. Constance stands on her mother's lap and coos as Close's husband and a health volunteer watch.

Lisa, 27, a BYU graduate student, and her husband, Clark, 26, are part of the Welcome Baby program developed by the United Way, the Utah County Health Program and BYU.

Welcome Baby is a home visitation program for first-time parents.

The program focuses on teaching parents how to form a knowledgeable and stable family.

Program volunteers visit families once a month and provide reading materials on subjects such as health, safety and infant development.

The Closes heard about the program through a friend

"Everyone who has a baby can give advice, but that doesn't mean they know what they are talking about."

"I wanted to share all of the great information of Welcome Baby with them," said Leuck, a volunteer and friend of the Closes.

Because Leuck has known the couple for three years, the visits may be a bit less formal than most but still informative.

Leuck said when she goes to the Closes' home, they talk about Constance's development and the things they have noticed she is doing differently. Leuck said she ends her visit by talking about health factors, developments and available community resources.

"She is my expert," Lisa said. "Everyone who has a baby can give advice, but that doesn't mean they know what they are talking about."

Leuck is also a volunteer coordinator for Welcome Baby and prepares volunteers to enter family's homes.

Volunteers attend a six-hour training session where they discuss topics such as communication and cultural sensitiv-

U.S. News and World Report publishes new ranking

By CARLY HART

Quietly but rapidly BYU's College of Nursing is climbing the national rankings.

This year's U.S. News and World Report ranking of college graduate programs, shows that BYU's nursing program has jumped from 103 to 58, out of 500 schools nationwide.

"We felt like we were gaining stature, but we were surprised at a jump that far in one year," said Elaine Marshall, dean of the College of Nursing.

Five years ago, one of the college's goals was just to make it onto the rankings lists, but the rapid rise in the rankings has surpassed all previous expectations, according to a recent news release.

Marshall said she thinks this jump has a lot to do with the quality of faculty and students at BYU's nursing program.

"We hold students to a very high academic and professional standard," Marshall said in a news release. "We've worked very hard to establish our program among the best."

The rankings are a result of peer assessment surveys sent to administrators and faculty at accredited schools of nursing throughout the nation.

"We know that we are one of the most excellent schools in the country, but it is validating to have that kind of recognition from our peers," Marshall said.

"If they are going to publish the list, we might as well be on the list, and if we are going to be on the list, we'd want to be higher up on the list," Marshall said.

"We have always had a good program, and it (the new ranking) doesn't affect the daily operations of faculty and students, but it is a nice recognition for the excellent work that they are doing," she said.

Ben Boyer, a Springville native who recently graduated from the nursing program, said he enjoyed the "diversity and opportunity" BYU's nursing program provided.

"Even though it is still Happy Valley, they try to get you a variety of experience," Boyer said. "BYU really gives nursing students a holistic look at caring for people."

Unwelcome gestures target tennis coach

By LISA YOUNG

Roses and notes from anonymous admirer borders on harassment finding roses and love notes be a common occurrence at but these expressions were welcome for happily-married y Hasler, the assistant en's tennis coach.

On Wednesday, Hasler received a third mysterious gift — a single taped to the railing going into office.

The harassment started on day when she found a bouquet roses on her car with a note read: "There is no secret more magi- than the secret of love."

"After the first thing, it was just this is a pretty funny joke, you w," Hasler said. "Someone has a crush on me. That's cute, but now it's pretty freaky."

On Tuesday, Hasler's name and a heart were cut into the grass outside her office window.

"I think, if it was just roses, it wouldn't bother me that much," said Hasler, whose office is located in a trailer behind the tennis courts. "But yesterday, with the carving in the grass, that was kind of scary because it just looked like it took a lot of time and effort."

Dr. Dan Parkinson, Hasler's

father, said he feels the harassment case should have been investigated more quickly.

"This is like someone comes into your home and steals something one day and comes back the very next day and steals something else," Parkinson said.

Parkinson said an investigation should have begun immediately after BYU Police came to look at the name carved in the grass.

Parkinson said, "If Holly's husband or myself had taken it into our own hands, which we were forced not to by Holly, we would have this guy by now. One of us would've been on Holly all day, and one would've been sitting there watching that trailer, or we would've put a security camera up."

BYU Police Lt. Greg Barber said "each harassment case has its own special needs and each is addressed based on the needs of the victim and the demands of the case."

After talking to the BYU Police, Parkinson said he finally feels his daughter's harassment case is receiving the attention it deserves.

Capt. Mike Harroun with the BYU Police said the case is under investigation and no other information is available.

BRIEFING

The world is our campus

Reuters

An Indonesian soldier takes position Wednesday during a clash with Acehne rebels at Lampu'u district in Aceh Besar. Fierce fighting between Indonesian troops and insurgents has killed at least 25 people in the northwestern province.

10 die in Indonesia's largest Aceh rebel crackdown

BANDA ACEH, Indonesia (AP) — Indonesia's military intensified attacks on the separatist guerrillas of Aceh province Wednesday, firing rockets at rebel bases and ordering troops to shoot arsonists on sight.

Aceh military commander Maj. Gen. Endang Suwarya said soldiers killed 10 rebels on the third and bloodiest day of the assault. Separatists put the death toll at 13, including 10 civilians, while the Indonesian Red Cross reported 10 deaths.

"We need to take urgent steps. We want this problem finished quickly," Suwarya said, referring to the rebellion in the mountainous oil- and gas-rich province of 4.3 million people.

The military operation, the largest since

Indonesia invaded East Timor in 1975, was ordered Monday by President Megawati Sukarnoputri after weekend peace talks in Tokyo broke down. The military said Tuesday that 12 rebels had been killed or captured since the fighting began.

Megawati imposed martial law, giving the military wide-ranging powers. That allowed Suwarya to order his men to shoot arsonists after unidentified men burned about 180 schools in recent days. Each side accused the other of the arson.

Suwarya also said authorities could arrest local journalists or close down media organizations if they quoted rebel sources in their reports.

Most of the fighting was near Bireun.

Bomb explodes at Yale

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A bomb exploded in an empty classroom at the Yale University law school Wednesday, sending debris flying and students scrambling for safety. No injuries were reported.

Yale spokeswoman Karen Peart said the blast was caused by some sort of device, but damage was limited. She didn't know whether any classes were being held in the building at the time.

Members of the FBI's terrorism task force were sent to the scene, but there were no initial indications that an international terrorist organization set off the bomb, according to two U.S. officials who are familiar with intelligence information. They spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Smoke rose from downtown New Haven following the blast at about 5 p.m.

"I saw a huge fireball come out to the middle of the hallway," said student Bob Hoo.

Tape calls for terrorism

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — An audiotape attributed to Osama bin Laden's top lieutenant on Wednesday called on Muslims to stage terrorist strikes against Jews, Americans and U.S. allies.

The Arab satellite station Al-Jazeera showed a still photograph of Ayman al-Zawahri wearing a white turban while a forceful speaker urged Muslims to draw inspiration from the Sept. 11 attacks.

"Consider your 19 brothers who attacked America in Washington and New York with their planes as an example," said the voice, speaking the classical Arabic typical of al-Qaida statements and making the accent difficult to place. Children's voices could be heard in the background.

In Washington, U.S. intelligence analysts were reviewing the tape. A U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said it was plausible that the speaker was al-Zawahri but a thorough analysis was necessary to be certain.

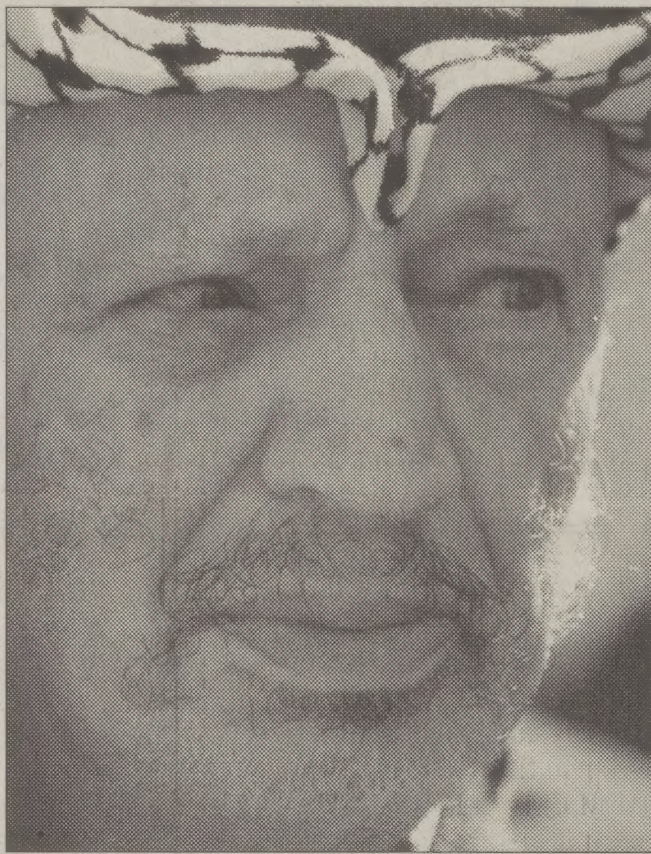

In the tape, the speaker referred to protests ahead of the U.S.-led invasion of Iraq and the early days of the war.

Palestinian President Yasser Arafat speaks to reporters Wednesday after a meeting with diplomats at his headquarters in the West Bank City of Ramallah.

Palestine: Leave us alone

JERUSALEM (AP) — Palestinian Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas called on Israel to stop invading Palestinian-controlled areas, saying Wednesday that it "deepens the hatred between the two peoples."

Israeli Foreign Minister Silvan Shalom said Wednesday that if Abbas, known as Abu Mazen, did not begin working to end terror attacks against Israel, he would wind up like Yasser Arafat, whom Israel is trying to marginalize.

"Abu Mazen's fate is in his own hands," Shalom said.

Also Wednesday, Israeli troops shot and killed two Palestinians in a confrontation in the West Bank village of Qarwet Bany Zeed, residents said. The dead were a 17-year-old stone thrower and a 35-year-old woman, according to Musa Abu Hmead, a hospital director in nearby Ramallah.

Algeria quake kills 95

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — A strong earthquake shook the Algerian capital region Wednesday night, killing at least 95 people and injuring some 350 others, the Interior Ministry said.

The quake hit about 7:45 p.m., cutting electricity in some neighborhoods of Algiers and causing panic throughout the city. It was followed by at least three aftershocks.

Algerian officials gave the magnitude at 5.4, but the U.S. Geological Survey in Washington put it at 6.7. The cause of the discrepancy wasn't immediately clear.

Algerian state radio said that most of the deaths occurred near the epicenter, located near Phenia, about 40 miles east of Algiers.

There were some 50 dead in Boumerdes, about six miles from the epicenter, 40 dead and 300 injured in Rouiba, just east of Algiers, and five dead in the capital, the Interior Ministry said.

"I saw the earth tremble. I saw people jump from the window of the hotel," Icham Mouiss of Boumerdes told French television station LCI.

A call for blood donors was issued and medical personnel were asked to pitch in and help.

Model United Nations team wins honorable mention

By JAMIE JACOBSEN

Hours of training paid off for BYU's Model United Nations team, who returned from national competition in New York with awards for honorable mention and distinguished delegation.

Students spent fall and winter semester training in research preparation, negotiation cases, public speaking exercises and diplomacy studies.

"Like an attorney they are graded on how well they do for their client," said Cory Leonard, BYU Model United Nations director.

"It's an interesting exercise in applied diplomacy where its one thing to read about international organizations and negotiation, but it's another thing to try and get a certain policy idea approved by 430 students in a five day negotiation simulation." During fall semester students from a variety of majors enroll in the MUN course. From the fall enrollment, a new competition team is chosen for winter semester. The students travel to New York in April to compete in the National Model United Nations competition.

"Our program is very unique because each year we take a brand new crop of students," Leonard said. "We aren't a competition team, we are an educational model UN program. We exist to train students in the skills that make for effective diplomacy."

Leonard said one of the things that makes BYU's team so effective is the variety of students that participate. This year's team had students from 10 different nationalities and a variety of majors.

"It's obvious people who are already interested in politics would want to come and do it," Leonard said. "We are interested in students who aren't necessarily involved in politics, who don't know anything about the UN. I've had students ask 'What does UN stand for.'"

To prepare for the competition the students went on two retreats, hosted a high school

MUN program, and spent many hours in class. Each student was given a partner and assigned to a committee to help with the extreme research load, Leonard said. The class chose to represent the countries of Bangladesh and Syria.

Students then must prepare to address various pressing global issues such as terrorism and the spread of HIV in sub-Saharan Africa. Although many hours of preparation go into the course, Rebecca McConkie, an English major from Colorado, said the experience was well worth it.

"It was certainly a lot of fun," McConkie said. "Politics isn't really my thing, I did it because it was new to me. It ended up being invigorating, fast paced and exciting."

Almost 3,000 students from 200 different schools participation in the Model United Nations competition.

"Attending competitions in NYC opened my eyes to a world I hadn't considered previously," said Rebecca van Uiter-Howell, BYU graduate. "Meeting students from around the world and working closely with them at competitions helped me gain new perspectives on so many issues."

Howell was one of the few students who attended the competition for two years, first as a student, and second as a teacher's assistant.

"I can look back on it and say that my decision to be on the MUN team affected basically the entire course of my life," Howell said.

"In my case both my career and my husband are directly attributable to being on the MUN team, since my husband and I were T.A.s for the team my second year, and I interviewed for my job here in NYC while on a trip for a MUN competition." Leonard said the thought of a political competition scares some of the students, but the class will send you to New York well prepared.

"I tell them anyone can do this but you have to be committed," Leonard said. "That is really what it all comes down to."

Romney Institute presents N. Dale Wright award

By J. MAC LARSEN

The Romney Institute of Public Management has honored N. Dale Wright with the 2003 N. Dale Wright Award.

This is only the second year the award has been given," said John Ogden, assistant dean of international relations for the Marriott School of Management.

The award is for our alumni who have demonstrated extraordinary service and leadership in the public sector and in their communities, said Romney Institute director Robert Parsons.

John Darrington represents a man of great integrity, a strong ethical and management efficiency in carrying out his responsibilities as a public servant and volunteer church member," Parsons said. "John has always been one who demonstrates kindness and sensitivity to those he associates with. He is the benchmark of what a public servant should be."

Darrington served as the city administrator of three different cities before becoming the city manager of Richland, Wash., where he is employed.

Darrington admits it's hard work to change a city's operations and it takes time and resources to do so.

"We're trying to change our basic culture and customer service," Darrington said. "That kind of change takes time, unless something big, like 9-11, happens to provoke change."

He said he thinks for any public institution to change, it must have four things: a shared vision, goals to support the vision, a clear mission and "universally agreed upon principles and values that guide the day-to-day operations."

The major challenge facing Darrington and other city officials is changing Richland city's economy.

For years Richland city has relied on the federal government to spur its economy, but Darrington wants the focus to shift to a privately owned and driven economy.

"We need to create a private sector mentality," Darrington said.

Darrington sees great things in store for Richland city and its 40,000 citizens.

One citizen said he appreciates the most is his wife, Susan Darrington, who has been active in several community groups in every city where they've lived.

She always tries to make each community where he works a better place to live, Darrington said.

Darrington graduated from BYU in 1970 with a bachelor's degree in family, home and social sciences, and again in 1972 with a master's of public administration from BYU.

BABY Volunteers give support to first-time parents

Before the volunteers are given a specific family. After training, the volunteers have an opportunity to visit a family with a United Way nurse.

Nurses visit high-risk infants, such as babies of teenage pregnancies and premature babies. Volunteers can only visit low-risk babies.

Kami Taylor, 26, a UVSC student studying behavioral science, has been a volunteer since February. She said she volunteers because having a son makes her feel like she can help someone.

"I was so confused because I didn't have the program," Taylor said. "I was worried about little things. It is nice to have someone with information to talk to."

There are 36 volunteers helping 73 families throughout Utah County.

"I think, coming from a parent perspective, the program is a great opportunity to feel the support, get some information and to feel confident in our role as a new parent," Leuck said.

Even though Clark, who is majoring in geography, lives home with Constance while Lisa works, the program has helped Lisa tremendously, Clark said.

"I grew up in a family where I babysat brothers and sisters, so I know what is going on," Clark said. The program probably helps Lisa more."

Lisa said she considers herself lucky to have Leuck.

During the third month of the program, the family is introduced to the Marriage Moments program. Participation in this program is optional.

Alan Hawkins, a professor in the School of Family Life at BYU, developed Marriage Moments - a program based on four marital virtues: friendship, generosity, fairness and loyalty.

"After a few months (of having a new baby), new stresses and big changes occur in marital relationships," Hawkins said. "We begin by talking about those changes and things they can do to keep the marriage strong."

The best thing for a baby is a healthy marriage, said Kimberly Lovejoy, 22, a graduate student studying marriage, family and human development and the project coordinator.

The program is designed to stimulate conversation and prevent any future problems. The program workbook includes several activities and questions.

Marriage Moments has only been part of the Welcome Baby program since November, so data regarding its effectiveness is not available. However, Lovejoy has heard many positive comments about the program.

"I think this is something people are looking for," Lovejoy said. "We hope that it helps people to be aware of what is normal."

Welcome Baby is a Utah County program administered by the United Way's Success by Six initiative. Success by Six's goal is to have children ready for school by age 6.

Welcome Baby and Marriage Moments are free. Anyone interested in volunteering or seeking help can contact the United Way at 374-2588.

Asian ward gives students a welcome alternative

By AMY CHOATE

Eight months ago, sophomore Hye Won Jin arrived from her native land of Korea. She came to study business at BYU, oceans away from home. She is like many other students who come from afar to Utah Valley, and she has found a support system to help her combat homesickness.

Every Sunday, Hye Won gets to mingle with other students from the same region of the world, and all she has to do is go to church.

Hye Won attends the Asian 2nd Ward of the BYU 1st Stake, one of four local wards designed specifically for those with an Asian background.

"It's easier to get to know Korean people and make more friends," Hye Won said. "We are from the same culture, we seem closer."

Junior A-Young Kim thinks the same way.

"It's definitely a different environment," she said. "It's like being home. The ward is very active, very close-knit. It has a different culture."

To accommodate these Asian students, BYU has four alternatives to regular wards. In addition to the two Asian wards for single people, there is also a Chinese ward and a local Korean branch in the area.

The Chinese 1st Ward has members from Taiwan, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Singapore and 13 provinces from mainland China. Though some members of the ward have always attended The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, others have recently joined.

"Some students from mainland China get a scholarship, come here, and join the church," said Bishop Zhou Wen Zhong from Taiwan. "To establish the true meaning of the gospel is the first target. Then we need time to compromise our cultures."

Some members of the Chinese 1st Ward come from Beijing, Shanghai and Guang Dong, places where the LDS Church is not prevalent. Bishop Zhong sees his purpose as strengthening these new members.

"In endorsement interviews, I will reinforce the gospel message, the gospel vision," Zhong said. "I share with them what is real life, what is the real purpose in studying here."

The BYU Asian 2nd Ward is comprised mostly of Korean and Japanese members. Single Asian students under the age of 31 that live above 800 North in Provo attend this ward.

The Asian wards were organized to meet the needs of the students.

"There are many kind people here," said Bishop Haruo Miyagi from Japan. "However, they are different. Some Asian people felt different. They felt alone."

One benefit of the Asian ward is the opportunity to overcome language barriers, Miyagi said. Though most of the meetings are in English, Sunday School classes are divided into Korean, Japanese and other languages.

"On Sunday, they can relax," Miyagi said. "They can rest one day a week."

Because many of the Asian ward members are English Language Center students, English is not their first language. This can make communication difficult.

"Speaking another language is like seeing through smoked glass," Miyagi said. "When they speak their own language, they understand precisely."

Members who attend the Asian wards must meet certain qualifications. They must be younger than 31, and older than 18. Members must also be of Asian descent, or engaged to someone of Asian descent.

The Asian 2nd Ward meets at the Manavu chapel on 400 E. 700 North at 2 p.m. every Sunday. The Asian 3rd Ward meets at 3:30 p.m. in room 107 in the Joseph Smith Building.

'Willows' brings children's book to life onstage

By ARI WUTHRICH

BYU theater students are bringing the children's classic "The Wind in the Willows" to the Pardoe Theatre beginning Friday.

The play is based on Kenneth Grahame's novel "The Wind in the Willows," which records the adventures of the incorrigible Toad and the attempts of his shrewder friends to save him.

"Willows" is a story about friendship, respect and finding a way to get along despite differences in opinion.

Alan Bennett adapted the play with original music composed by Murray Boren.

"One way of 'getting along' involves an individual or group achieving success at the expense of another," said Char Nelson, director. "The second way focuses on a generous-spirited appreciation of the value of the other, and a sensitivity to his or her needs, a willingness to bend one's own objectives in order to bless and serve another."

Nelson is a 54-year-old graduate student from Provo studying theater.

Shelley Tuckfield Graham, who plays Rat, said "Willows" is a story about a group of friends who come together while trying to help Toad calm down and end up having a lot of adventures along the way.

"It is one of those plays you can just have fun watching," Graham said. "There is comedy, fighting, as well as tender friendship moments."

One of the things that drew Graham into trying out was a picture of the costumes.

"I saw the costumes and they looked really exciting," Graham said. "I thought it would be fun to play an animal."

"It is one of those plays you can just have fun watching.

There is comedy, fighting, as well as tender moments."

Shelley Tuckfield

Graham

Scanlon said they wanted the audience to remember the characters were still humans by blending a human and animal look.

"Here is where a lot of current fantasies come from," Scanlon said. "Fantasy worlds are mingling with human worlds."

It is a rare opportunity at BYU to see so many animals on the stage, Graham said.

Although "Willows" is a children's show, BYU policy discourages children under the age of 6 from attending.

Costume designer Rory Scanlon said he and fellow designer Morelia Diaz did a significant amount of research to design the characters. They read popular children's versions of "Willows" as well as researched what the actual animals would look like in the wild.

Rat, Mole, and Badger put up with Toad's antics in "The Wind in the Willows," Friday through June 14 in the Pardoe Theatre.

Scanlon said the play appeals to children, but more to those who are childlike. The play points out that everyone has feelings and desires they want to be recognized by others, he said.

The boastful, unstable Toad, the hospitable Water Rat, the shy, wise, childlike Badger and the Mole with his brave boyish ways are neither animals nor men, but are types of that deeper humanity which influences us all, Nelson said.

Brass band brings Britain to Provo park

Utah Premiere Brass gives free concerts every Sunday in June

By TIFFANY RUECKERT

A full-size British-style brass band will entertain listeners with music of all styles in a series of free, Sunday night concerts in June.

Alan Boyer and Steve Call formed Utah Premiere Brass in 2000. Boyer said they were trying to revive a musical genre that was once the pride of every Utah community.

"When people settled here there were a lot of small music groups," said Boyer. "I believe at the beginning of the 20th century there were over 100 brass bands in Utah ... they virtually all died out. Utah Premiere Brass is really the renaissance pioneer of brass bands in Utah."

Boyer moved to Utah from his native England in 1998. He participated in many of Britain's leading brass bands before coming to the United States.

When Boyer and Call first started the band, it had just 10 members, but it now has a full complement of brass band instruments with more than 30 brass and percussion players.

Utah Premiere Brass has a unique sound capable of whispered soft passages and powerful fortissimos, Boyer said.

The group plays a variety of musical styles, including slow ballads, jazz, show tunes and solo concertos.

"We try to provide something for everyone," said Boyer. "We keep the tradition of the walkabout halfway through the program. The band plays a nice jaunty march and we go for a walk about the park. It gives people an opportunity to stretch their legs."

Boyer said brass bands started in England during the Industrial Revolution. Coal mines and woolen mill factory owners would sponsor the bands to provide entertainment for the workers and the community.

Boyer said he is excited about the possibilities for more brass bands in the United States, because they won't be bound by the same traditional rules as those in England.

Utah Premiere Brass will perform as part of the annual Summer Band Series presented by the Provo Arts Council and Provo Parks and Recreation Department. Boyer said this is Utah Premiere Brass's second time participating in the Summer Band Series.

"The Summer Band Series is a wonderful opportunity to bring the community together and enjoy music in the park on a lovely Sunday evening," said Kathryn Allen of the Provo Arts Council.

The performances will take place every Sunday in June from 7-8 p.m. in North Park, located at 500 N. 500 W. in Provo.

The wait continues for facility

For Practice Facility under construction west of the Smith Fieldhouse will not include an indoor track.

BYU's track teams have been waiting for more than 50 years for a new indoor facility

By AUBRIE LATIMORE

As track teams continue to wait for an indoor track, they will be disappointed when the construction of a new indoor Practice Facility west of the Smith Fieldhouse was announced in September, many within the track program thought it would include an indoor track.

"We have been petitioning for an indoor track," said the women's track coach R. Poole. "We are a traveling team and yet we have the most extensive collegiate record at the university."

Despite being a traveling team, the women's track team's impressive record includes a total of 20 consecutive conference championships, and it is currently ranked among the top teams in the nation.

The men's team has won five consecutive conference titles and has a rich history.

"It would be great to have a place to exhibit our wares, to have a crowd and begin home games," Poole said.

However, BYU's track team has not hosted an indoor track meet in more than 50 years. The NCAA has deemed the current George Albert Smith Fieldhouse unsafe to host meets primarily because of its blind corners.

Recent changes in the design of the new practice facility will not lessen the teams traveling.

"We could not design a facility that gave football their requested space and allow room for a track," said BYU women's athletic director Elaine Michaelis. "The Indoor Practice Facility will give the baseball, football, softball, soccer and golf teams a place to practice during the winter months. In addition, the student-athlete academic center will provide a place where every student-athlete can study and receive academic assistance."

The new complex, which will be completed in the fall, will consist of two buildings: the Indoor Practice Facility west of the Smith Fieldhouse and the Student-Athlete Center directly north of the Smith Fieldhouse that includes a student-athlete academic center, a strength and conditioning center, a nutrition center, training facilities, the Hall of Fame showcase, an equipment room, locker rooms, conference rooms and offices.

Original plans had an indoor track included, but lack of funds and complaints from the football department changed the plans.

"The one condition the board set was that all the money for this facility must be raised by the end of this year," said President Merrill J. Bateman at the groundbreaking ceremony on Sept. 16. "With $8 million left to be raised, I gave my promise that we would have the rest of the funding in place by December 31."

The Smith Fieldhouse, which now houses most of BYU's sports programs, is more than 50 years old. When it was built, BYU's athletic program consisted of six sports. Today, BYU has more than 600 student-athletes competing in 21 sports.

Until future plans for an indoor track are made the Cougars will continue to compete on the road.

The men's team won the 2003 Mountain West Conference outdoor title and the women finished second.

Cougars win on Jacobsen homer

BYU breaks 5-5 tie with two-run home run in the seventh

By CHRIS GRAHAM

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — The BYU baseball team struggled through the stretch but earned its 7-6 victory against New Mexico in the first round of the Mountain West Conference Tournament.

"I'm really proud of the way our guys battled," said BYU head coach Vance Law. "Our guys maintained their composure and it worked out the right way."

Junior Paul Jacinto earned his 10th win of the season as BYU's starting pitcher.

Jacinto was named the MWC pitcher of the year on Tuesday. He posted a league best 9-1 record in MWC games with 53 strikeouts.

Kainoa Obrey got the Cougars into the early lead with a 400-foot home run over the center field wall to give BYU a 3-1 lead after the first.

BYU held the lead 5-2 through five innings after Doug Jackson and Jake Stubblefield crossed home plate twice.

Jacinto pitched six solid innings but got into trouble in the seventh, giving up four hits and allowing the Lobos to score three runs to tie the game.

The Cougar defense also struggled in the seventh inning. With the bases loaded, Lobo Sean Murray hit an infield fly that fell between third baseman Obrey and shortstop Ranger Wiens in a costly miscommunication.

"We were lucky that was called an infield fly or that could have been more disastrous," Law said.

BYU answered strong in the bottom of the seventh inning with Brock Jacobsen hitting a huge 450-foot two-run home run over the center field wall allowing the Cougars to take a 7-5 lead.

"I jumped out of the batters box and ended up jogging to second because I knew I hit it pretty good," Jacobsen said.

UNM rallied in the ninth inning when Alexander doubled to left field scoring Dusty Young and putting Alexander in tying position with only one out.

Law brought in left-hander Kenneth Gravely to relieve Jacinto in the ninth inning. Gravely struck out Joe Salas to get two outs in the ninth.

"I thought Paul lost his stuff in the seventh inning, but I knew in my mind unless he said 'I'm done' he would stay out there," Law said. "He said he felt fine so he stayed out there."

Jeff Mousser will be the starting pitcher tonight at 7 as BYU will face San Diego State. The Aztecs beat the University of Utah to put themselves in the winners bracket.

The game will be broadcast live on KOVO Radio 960.

Cycling club growing

Club unable to attend nationals because of lack of funding

By KATY MACDONALD

Members of the BYU Cycling Club enjoy getting out of the Provo and into the lush backcountry to indulge in the speed and freedom of cycling.

There is something really about getting off in the mountains by yourself on a bike," club president Dan Reeves said. "I just like that feeling. It is a stress reliever."

Reeves, a 24-year-old geographer, teaching major, first got into cycling after his mission.

"I always had a curiosity about road biking, so I just went out and bought a road bike and got into it," Reeves said. "It is better than running because you can go a lot faster and cover more distance."

The cycling club gained BYU approval in 1999. Members of the club spent two-and-a-half years working with the university to get a home. Now there are more than 30 students and faculty that rely on its existence.

The club meets once a month for a "bagel ride" where they ride about 20 miles and then stop to eat bagels.

"It's kind of a social thing during the school year, and during the summer we do our own thing," Reeves said.

The college season for cycling is from March to May. A race is 50-80 miles against other teams within the same division.

The club qualified for the National Collegiate Cycling Association national championships in May, but was unable to make an appearance because of insufficient funding.

"We did not want to go into debt for a bike ride," Reeves said. "We are hoping that we can raise more funds and go next year for sure because that's two years in a row that we've qualified and we haven't been able to go for one reason or another."

Funding for the club comes from the $20 membership fee and various fundraisers.

The club offers clinics where they work on riding techniques such as cornering and how to maintain control when someone bumps into you during a race.

"It's fun to compete against other people," Reeves said. "It keeps you in shape and gives you a goal to shoot for. That's my interest. To keep in shape and then compete."

Reeves' favorite place to ride is the Alpine Loop up past Sundance and Aspen Grove.

"That one's a blast," Reeves said. "You can get away from pretty much everything."

Reeves said he hopes the cycling club will get more organized so they will be able to attend nationals next year and give more people an opportunity to try out road biking.

The club can be contacted via e-mail at ycycling@hotmail.com.

Fighting the "Pack Rat" Syndrome!

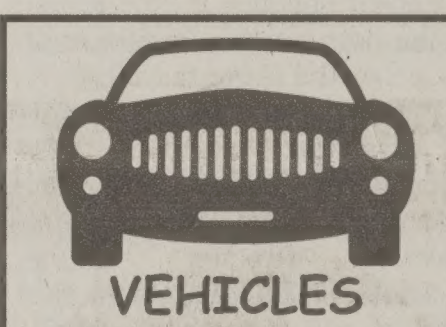

Go through your house periodically, eliminating items you no longer want. One possible criterion: When you no longer notice a decorative object (such as a picture), it may be time to get rid of it. Be ruthless, discard all unused junk. When in doubt, throw it out!

Recipe of the Week

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE KABOBS (These dessert kabobs are the perfect mix of classy and fun.)

Ingredients
12 medium strawberries, hulled
2 oz shortcakes, quartered (use two 3-inch shortcake dessert cups)
1/4 cup Fisher Real Semi-Sweet Chocolate Chips, or other brand
1 Tbsp reduced-calorie margarine

Instructions
1. Line a cookie sheet with waxed paper. Alternately, thread 3 strawberries and 2 shortcake quarters onto each of 4 wood or metal skewers.
2. Combine chocolate chips and margarine together in a small saucepan; melt over low heat, stirring until smooth and well blended. Drizzle chocolate mixture over kabobs. Refrigerate until set, about 4 minutes. Yields 1 kabob per serving.

The new craze: Fit over thin, study says

By JENNIFER HANSEN

The U.S. cultural obsession with thinness over fitness may cause citizens severe health problems and side effects, a local official said.

"A lot of people don't understand the consequences of not being healthy now," said Dr. Joseph Miner, health officer for the Utah County Health Department. "In 30 to 40 years, you're going to suffer some repercussions for not being healthy now."

People should take an intent look at their lives and realize their eating and exercising habits will affect their health later in life, Miner said.

Mealanie Clements, office manager at Canyon Springs Wellness Center in Provo, said the consequence of valuing thinness over fitness is all around health problems — not only physical, but also psychological.

"It gets to a point where it's so obsessive that it overrides their lives," Clements said.

The coordinators at the center focus on planning food programs that work with people's specific body types and lifestyles, instead of promoting one general diet, she said.

Kristyn McQuarrie, a BYU psychology student from Arizona, said she thinks instead of students being healthy for themselves, they think they have to achieve and maintain an ideal.

"It's kind of hard at BYU, because we think we need to be perfect right now," McQuarrie said.

Obsessing over thinness makes people depressed because that ideal can't always be achieved, she said.

"Some people can never fit the ideal that we feel is so important," McQuarrie said. "It's just not healthy for certain body types."

She said the process of achieving this perfection is endless.

"You never reach that point where you're happy," she said. "It's always five more pounds — 10 more pounds. But if you can learn to like your own body and just make sure you're healthy and exercising, it's much better for you."

Tim Butler, health management analyst for Intermountain Health Plan, said the U.S. society is preoccupied with thinness because of the culture's focus on media.

"The catch is, because we're so media oriented, so much influenced by images," Butler said. "We want to feel good fast and do it with a purchase of a product."

People don't have to go out and spend a lot of money to look and feel better, Butler said. They just have to make some simple, basic changes in their lifestyles.

"It's hard to be fit and trim," he said. "Because we've engineered physical activity out of our lives."

The drive for thinness instead of fitness has pushed some people to extremes like taking up smoking just to lose a few pounds.

A National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute study reported teenage girls who place a high value on thinness are four times more likely to start smoking in adolescence than girls who said they were not so concerned with being thin.

Eric Edwards, Utah County Health Department's health promotions director, said the department strives to endorse health methods that can increase the quality of life.

"We definitely try to educate the community about eating healthful foods, the health benefits of exercise and all of the things we can be doing now to help prevent devastating health consequences," Edwards said.

He said the department has organized a variety of cardiovascular health programs that provide different kinds of community based prevention activities.

One method is to help encourage families to utilize local parks and trails and to be physically active, Edwards said.

"Anything that can increase the quality of life, is what we strive for," Edwards said.

Utah farms face difficult summer

By RYAN OLIVER

Utah farmers are making preparations for another dry and difficult summer.

Cindy Shepherd, of Shepherd Hogs in Lakeshore, said she already foresees problems for her 60-acre farm.

"The insects are terrible and the water situation is scary," she said. "There isn't even enough water to maintain our regular crops, so we planted more barley than corn since barley takes less water."

A recently released agricultural report stated water shortages, insect infestations and poor weather will continue the harsh conditions farmers have faced for the last several years.

The report, by the Utah Agricultural Statistics Service, said drought problems are so severe that Rich County in Northern Utah will only be operating two canals this year, and Weber County expects to run out of irrigation water by late July.

The drought will also affect ranchers, especially in the southern portion of the state, according to the report. Although livestock is in good condition, more moisture is needed to keep rangelands healthy.

The report also said many ranchers plan to move their cattle onto the range later in the year and move them off earlier than normal this year to help improve the range's condition.

Another problem farmers face is an increase in the number of insects feeding on their crops.

"I have never seen so many flies and bugs," Shepherd said. "Even our lawn has been eaten up because it didn't freeze hard enough to kill the bugs."

Rick Kestle, statistician at the state's agricultural statistics service, said although the growth of many crops is on schedule, low subsoil moisture and reservoir levels are worrisome.

"There is danger ahead unless we have a super summer," he said.

However, not everyone in the agriculture industry is concerned.

Katherine Larsen, of Little Farm Research in Pleasant Grove, said she believes drought worries are exaggerated.

"I'm not buying into the severity of the drought," she said. "The media is making a huge deal out of it. If there was no rain until August, it would be a big deal, but we've had pouring rain in April and May."

"Conservation is stupid right now," she said. "The reservoirs are full, and the water table is really high around here."

However, Chris Finlinson, public affairs officer for Central Utah Water Conservation District, said Utah's reservoirs are not full, and the state's snow pack is only at 50 percent of normal levels.

Springville farmer goes to court for bird deaths

By KENDRA SMITH

SPRINGVILLE — A Springville farmer charged with poisoning almost 1,000 migratory birds in January will enter a plea Thursday.

Lenard Jud Harward, owner of Harward Farms in Springville, has been charged with killing mostly red-wing blackbirds and brewers blackbirds with the illegal misuse of an insecticide.

Harward will face Judge Nufferon, U.S. Magistrate Court, in Salt Lake City May 22.

If he pleads guilty, Harward could face a maximum sentence of six months in prison and a $15,000 fine for the misdemeanors.

In January, after receiving many phone calls about the dead birds lying on the highway, The Division of Wildlife Services contacted the Federal Fish and Wildlife office about the problem.

The Federal Fish and Wildlife cleanup crew found almost 1,000 dead birds altogether on the highway and on Harward's farm.

The Federal Fish and Wildlife Services investigated further and discovered that Harward had killed the birds because they were causing health problems to his livestock.

Harward said he did nothing wrong in actually killing the birds.

"The birds are a pest, and it's not illegal to kill the birds when they become a pest," Harward said.

John Neal, an agent for the U.S. Federal Fish and Wildlife Services, agreed that Harward did have a problem with the blackbirds.

He said Harward complained the birds ate his sheep's food and made the sheep sick.

"It's not uncommon for blackbirds to congregate in the winter months," Neal said. "They form these huge flocks, and you have two or three thousand blackbirds descend on your feedlot."

But killing blackbirds, regardless of a farmer's problem with them, is a violation of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act.

The act, signed in 1918, prohibited the killing of any birds that migrate internationally from Mexico to Canada or Japan to the Soviet Union.

Neal said Harward also misused a toxic insecticide, Furadan, normally used to kill insects on alfalfa.

Harward allegedly mixed it with cracked corn and spread it around his feedlot, trying to kill the blackbirds.

He not only endangered the birds, but the people in the area as well.

"Those dead birds full of that poison posed a significant risk to really anyone that would come in contact with them because Furadan is a very toxic substance," Neal said.

Still, Harward said he doesn't believe the situation was that big of a deal, and he had no intentions of hiring an attorney until the media created a lot of hype.

Neal, however, disagreed, and said the Fish and Wildlife Services found the killing of the birds and the misuse of insecticide a big problem.

"It's significant to us," Neal said. "We don't like to see these kinds of chemicals out in the environment when they're used in a fashion that's not lawful."

Harward's misuse of insecticide is not uncommon in Utah, Neal said. People misuse pesticides to kill predators and other animals.

Most of the time, the evidence or claims for the other cases aren't strong enough for Neal to take to court.

Drunk driving at record low in Utah County

By KENDRA SMITH

Memorial Day weekend means more cops, more tickets and a crackdown on drunk driving.

"(Drinking) kills more people on the highway every year than other types of deaths, either accidental or on purpose," said Sgt. Dan Rosenhan of the Utah Highway Patrol.

Last year, 16 percent of Utah's car crashes were alcohol-related, compared to 42 percent of car accidents in the nation.

While the national average for alcohol-related car crashes is going up, Utah's appears to be decreasing, said Marilee Gomez, fatalities analyst for the Utah Highway Safety Division.

Effective law enforcement has decreased the DUI average, Rosenhan said.

A highway patrol's priority is to combat the problem; Rosenhan said the division takes it seriously.

One effort to target drunk drivers is called a "blitz." About every three weeks, a highway patrol squad targeting drunk drivers saturates the highway with extra officers to catch drunk drivers, said Gomez, who is part of a DUI patrol squad.

For the last blitz, Rosenhan said, 33 officers made 38 DUI arrests. The next blitz is scheduled for Memorial Day weekend, he said.

In the last 20 years, Utah has seen a steady decrease in DUI-related deaths on Utah highways, he said. Provo is also seeing a decrease in drunk driving, and car accidents, said Provo police Lt. Greg DuVal.
